Red light gets the green light

- Federal government is 'strongly considering' appealing Ontario court decision
- Ruling strikes down Criminal Code offences for adults, but not those under 18

A court decision striking down key provisions of Canada's prostitution law is being hailed as an emancipation for sex-trade workers.

The Ontario Superior Court ruled yesterday the laws are unconstitutional because they're contributing to the danger faced by sex-trade workers.

The judge found that laws against keeping a common bawdy house, communicating for the purposes of prostitution and living on the avails of the trade "are not in accord with the principles of fundamental justice."

The lawyer for the sex-trade workers says the judgment, however, is subject to a 30-day stay during which the law remains in place, adding the federal government can seek an extension of that stay period.

In her ruling, Justice Susan Himel said it now falls to Parliament to "fashion corrective action."

"It is my view that in the meantime these unconstitutional provisions should be of no force and effect, particularly given the seriousness of the charter violations," Himel wrote.

Prostitution was not illegal in Canada, but the Ontario Superior Court struck down three provisions that criminalized most aspects of prostitution.

The federal government had argued that prostitution is inherently dangerous, no matter where it is practised.

Thomson bows out to back Smitherman

Smitherman says he's 'privileged' to work alongside former rival

Sarah Thomson walked out of her campaign headquarters yesterday and into the waiting arms of former mayoral rival George Smitherman, only two weeks after she said he can't be trusted with a budget.

After a quick embrace, they walked into his campaign headquarters, where his supporters burst into deafening applause and a chant of "Sarah, Sarah."

Thomson had announced hours earlier that she was halting the mayoral bid she launched in January and urging her supporters to vote for the former Ontario deputy premier to help stop the Rob Ford political juggernaut.

When asked what changed her mind about Smitherman, Thomson cited Smitherman's budget blueprint released Monday.

"You know what? I eat my words because I thought his plan was terrific," Thomson said as she and Smitherman faced the TV cameras together for the first time as campaign allies.

Motivation

- Thomson said her up-close view of Ford since he joined the race in March has convinced her he is "going to basically destroy transit, he doesn't care about the social issues that George Smitherman cares about, there's so many reasons ... these reasons are very important to the long-term future of Toronto."
- Smitherman said he made no promises in return for Thomson's support but said he will consider adopting some of her platform, singling out her arts and culture policies.

'I'm not going to worry': Ford

Mayoral candidate Rob Ford reacted diplomatically to news that Sarah Thomson is bowing out of the race and supporting George Smitherman to block Ford from becoming mayor.

"I wish Ms. Thomson all the success in her future endeavours," Ford told reporters after describing his budget plan yesterday in a speech to the Empire Club of Canada.

Ford ducked when asked if he thinks Thomson supporters will follow her wishes and end up voting for Smitherman.

"You know what, that's up to the people of the city. I think people know who can put an end to the wasteful spending at city hall and stop the gravy train. And Rob Ford will do that."

Ford said he is focused on his front-running campaign.

"I'm not going to worry about her campaign or anyone else's," he said. "I just know Rob Ford's campaign is doing very well."

In rolling out his financial strategy, Ford added a new wrinkle by promising to set up an "emergency relief fund" to help people like those forced out of their Wellesley Street apartments by a fire.

Premier vows to 'stay focused on the job at hand'

McGuinty announces expanded energy and property tax credit for seniors But critics still unimpressed

DARREN CALABRESE/THE CANADIAN PRESS FILE

Premier Dalton McGuinty

Premier Dalton McGuinty shrugged off another poll yesterday that suggests his Liberal government may be out of a job next fall as opposition parties renewed their attacks over soaring hydro bills.

Even though recent polls indicate a majority of voters think it's time for a change in government, McGuinty said they won't distract him from focusing on issues that matter to families, like schools.

"I've got to stay focused on the job at hand," he said. "There's only one poll that counts. That's the one you take on election day."

McGuinty, who has been under fire for weeks over rising home electricity costs, acknowledged that hydro bills have gone up for many people and insists he's been listening to their concerns.

The NDP is calling for a break on the provincial portion of the HST on hydro bills, which would provide immediate relief for millions of consumers, not just seniors, said New Democrat Rosario Marchese.

HARMONIZED TAX DEBATE

No HST exemption: Minister

Finance Minister Dwight Duncan quashed any hope for an HST exemption yesterday, saying the government is already helping consumers by offering tax credits, income tax cuts and three rebate cheques as part of the harmonized sales tax package.

The 13 per cent HST is a levy on consumption, not income, which gives consumers greater power over how much tax they end up paying, he argued.

"People will hopefully take advantage of conservation alternatives as well as these tax credits to help them better manage their household expenses," Duncan said.

Seniors who qualify for the tax credit will be reimbursed quarterly starting next summer, with the first cheque arriving June 2011, finance officials said. Those cheques will also arrive on the months when they aren't already receiving one of the two remaining HST transition cheques, Duncan added.

"People, particularly in more modest incomes, will see a steady flow of credit throughout the year, as opposed to having to wait until the end of the year to get money."

Opposition parties have been hammering the Liberals for weeks over rising home electricity bills, saying the premier's green energy policies, as well as July's addition of the HST to electricity bills, are to blame. THE CANADIAN PRESS

COURTS IN NO RUSH TO HEAR KHADR APPEAL

Canada's courts have effectively handed the Harper government a win in its fight against Omar Khadr by refusing to take up the case on an urgent basis, his lawyer said yesterday.

The refusal to hear the case immediately comes weeks before Khadr's war crimes trial resumes in Guantanamo Bay.

In January, the Supreme Court of Canada concluded the government had violated Khadr's constitutional rights and ordered it to make amends.

In July, Federal Court Judge Russel Zinn found the government had flouted the high court ruling, and gave it a week to come up with ways to fix the situation.

Zinn also signalled his displeasure with the government's foot-dragging.

Ottawa opted to fight the ruling and won a stay of Zinn's decision.

Khadr had wanted the appeal settled by the Federal Court of Appeal before his military-commission trial.

"We are extremely disappointed that the Federal Court of Appeal was unable to hear and determine this appeal in a timely way."
NATE WHITLING, KHADR'S LAWYER

The 24-year-old Canadian citizen is charged by the Americans with murder in violation of the rules of war for allegedly throwing a hand grenade that killed a U.S. soldier in Afghanistan in 2002.

The trial, which was abruptly halted on its first day in August after his Pentagon-appointed lawyer collapsed in court, is due to resume Oct. 18.

Khadr is the lone remaining westerner held at Guantanamo Bay.

New charges in lotto case

Ontario ombudsman accused retailers of collecting dishonest winnings 3 years ago ◐ Blamed Crown agency for letting them get away with it

TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Police will announce new charges today stemming from an insider win scandal at the troubled Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp.

Provincial police commissioner Chris Lewis will be on hand to talk about what police are calling a "high-profile" investigation involving fraudulent claims of a major Ontario lottery prize.

Police wouldn't go into details, but say the charges stem from a different investigation than the one they undertook in 2007.

That probe resulted in a former convenience store owner being charged with stealing a winning lottery ticket and fraudulently claiming $5.7 million in prize money. The owner, Hafiz Malik, was sentenced in June to one year in jail.

Retailer apologizes for selling 'junior' thongs

Advertising Playboy-branded thongs as a junior girls' item in a back-to-school flyer was a "serious mistake," discount retailer Giant Tiger said yesterday.

The company, which has stores across Canada, said the Playboy attire was aimed at women, not girls.

"It wasn't done on purpose. We have taken steps in our marketing department to make sure that it never, ever happens again," vice-president of marketing Dave Thorpe said.

"It was a serious mistake that we made and we deeply regret it."

Giant Tiger received complaints from about 30 parents who were offended by the flyer, and wrote each of them to apologize, added Thorpe.

"In response to the customer feedback, we've removed the Playboy merchandise from the Giant Tiger website and it won't be displayed in future Giant Tiger flyers," he said.

Playboy's policy

Playboy headquarters in Chicago says it never markets anything to people younger than 18.

- Product positioning. Playboy-branded products can't be situated near products geared toward minors such as Barbie dolls or Hello Kitty products.
- A matter of opinion. Part of the problem is that "junior" is considered a women's size category in retail clothing sector, but not by the general public.

Snow removal fight costs city about $300,000

Has been fighting legal battle over removing snow and ice from laneways
533 slip-and-fall claims in '08

The City of Toronto's legal battle to avoid removing ice and snow from busy laneways has so far cost taxpayers at least $300,000, a lawyer in the case estimates.

Alan Preyra calculated the costs after the city lost its appeal of a ruling that found it liable for his client's fall 10 years ago.

"This case could have been settled for $10,000 or $12,000 years ago. It's now costing taxpayers at least $300,000. You know how many laneways they could have cleaned for $300,000?" Preyra said in an interview.

In a decision last Friday, the Divisional Court upheld a ruling that called the city "grossly negligent" for not clearing a laneway adjacent to the Greenwood subway exit on the Bloor-Danforth line. The laneway was regularly used by local residents, subway passengers and students, and for deliveries to the back entrance of stores.

The city was ordered to pay $33,948 to Vier Guy — a now 43-year-old nurse — who slipped on ice and fractured her wrist.

TANNIS TOOHEY/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Extending snow removal to Toronto's laneways could cost an extra $21 million.

Three Divisional Court justices agreed with a December 2008 ruling that "the laneway should receive the same standard of maintenance as a sidewalk."

Provincial law requires municipalities to maintain all sidewalks. They can pass bylaws like Toronto's requiring homeowners to clean snow from adjacent sidewalks. But courts have ruled that if someone slips and falls, municipalities are liable — not homeowners.

Between 2003 and 2008, lawsuits springing from slip-and-fall incidents on icy city sidewalks are estimated to cost the city more than $30 million after all the bills are paid.

The city released the figures after the Toronto Star filed a freedom of information request in January 2009.

Toronto spends $12 million a year cleaning and salting three-quarters of the city's 8,000 kilometres of sidewalks. It calculates that extending sidewalk snow removal to all neighbourhoods would cost another $7 million to $8 million a year.

The city can appeal the laneway ruling, but Preyra said it would first have to ask for the appeal court's permission. Further appeals, he added, would only drive up the costs to taxpayers.

Girl missing 14 years

Ontario Provincial Police are hoping someone can help solve the disappearance 14 years ago of a northeastern Ontario teen.

On the afternoon of Sept. 29, 1996, Melanie Marie Ethier left a friend's house in New Liskeard to walk home — a distance of approximately one kilometre.

The 15-year-old didn't reach her home and her mother called the New Liskeard Police Service to report her daughter missing.

To date, all resources of the former New Liskeard Police Service and the Ontario Provincial Police have not found any trace of the missing girl.

TTC chair rides into the sunset with advice

Recommends city invest millions in bus, streetcar transportation Wants open-payment fare system

As he nears the end of his term at the TTC, outgoing transit commission chair Adam Giambrone has issued a swan song in the form of a YouTube video and a detailed, comprehensive report on the achievements of the system over the past five years, including recommendations for further improvements.

Called Moving Transit Forward, the video and report was produced with about $15,000 from the Davenport city councillor's own budget — rather than at TTC expense.

It recommends the city invest millions on improving bus and streetcar transportation, implementing an open-payment fare system so riders can pay using a credit card or cellphone, and transforming the transit agency into a greener operation.

DAVID COOPER/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Adam Giambrone

The video shows Giambrone entering a subway turnstile by swiping his BlackBerry on an electronic reader. The camera follows him as he types while sitting on the train — a scenario Giambrone recommends the TTC continue to pursue since there is no cell service in subway tunnels yet.

Key among his recommendations, though, is making surface transportation more efficient for the 700,000 riders who use buses and streetcars every day.

The report notes 70 per cent of subway users connect to surface transit.

Four aviation bodies sign deal for more safety

International Air Transport Association says the deal marks a new era between industry and government

An agreement signed in Montreal by four international bodies will mean fewer aviation accidents in the future, says the secretary general of the International Civil Aviation Organization.

ICAO, the U.S. Department of Transportation, the European Union and the International Air Transport Association signed the Global Safety Information Exchange yesterday.

ICAO secretary general Raymond Benjamin said the agreement is another step in the process of transparency.

"What it will mean for the consumer ... is fewer accidents in the future because what we will be doing is exchanging information that currently is not available to each other," he told a news conference.

Benjamin said ICAO, the United Nations agency that oversees civil aviation, will pass along information to the three other bodies on a need-to-know basis.

The ICAO said in certain parts of the world air travellers already know which airlines are not allowed to fly because of safety concerns.

LONG-FORM CENSUS

Opposition parties united on census

The Conservatives slammed their political rivals as a "coalition" ready to ride roughshod over privacy rights, as the three opposition parties backed a motion yesterday to revive the mandatory long-form census.

The Liberals, NDP and Bloc Québécois criticized the government's decision to axe the long census as ideologically driven and harmful to decision-makers across the country.

A Liberal motion, scheduled for a vote today, was demanding the return of the mandatory long questionnaire, minus the threat of jail time.

Little evidence of misconduct, files suggest

RCMP and ethics watchdog have since refused to investigate Guergis still unwelcome with Tories

New documents suggest Prime Minister Stephen Harper had little evidence of wrongdoing when he decided to turf Helena Guergis from cabinet and the Conservative caucus.

Indeed, Guergis is mentioned only once — and then not even by name — in 36 pages of documents that private investigator Derrick Snowdy gave to the RCMP last spring.

The documents were tabled with the Commons government operations committee earlier this week.

They include some references to Guergis' husband, former Conservative MP Rahim Jaffer, including a notorious email in which controversial Toronto venture capitalist Nazim Gillani boasted that Jaffer "has opened up the Prime Minister's Office to us."

SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Helena Guergis

But the only mention of Guergis herself comes in a text message from Gillani, advising an associate that he was "with Rahim and his wife."

Harper cited "serious allegations" as the reason he decided last April to dump Guergis from cabinet and turn the matter over to the RCMP — a move that came one day after Snowdy met Conservative party lawyer Arthur Hamilton.

Scores buried in Mexico landslide

A hillside collapsed on hundreds of sleeping residents yesterday in a rural Mexican community drenched for days by two major storms, killing at least seven and leaving at least 100 missing, officials said.

The death toll could rise much higher in Santa Maria Tlahuitoltepec, a town 220 kilometres southeast of Mexico City. Oaxaca state Civil Protection operations coordinator Luis Marin said 100 people were confirmed missing, but Oaxaca Gov. Ulises Ruiz said 500 to 1,000 people could be buried. At least 100 homes were buried, and residents who made it out have had no success in digging out their neighbours, an official said.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ U.S. Vice-President Joe Biden infuriated progressives earlier this week by saying Democrats should quit complaining about President Barack Obama.

U.S. president, vice-president accused of scolding progressives

Barack Obama, Bill Clinton, Joe Biden, Robert Gibbs — they're all dedicated Democrats, presumably progressive in their politics.

And yet they're antagonizing the Democratic base with just five weeks before the potentially game-changing mid-term elections that could see Republicans take back control of the House of Representatives. It's been dubbed "hippie punching," and those on the left were up in arms about it once again yesterday.

Vice-President Biden is the latest to have infuriated progressives for his remarks earlier this week that the party's base should quit complaining about his boss.

At a fundraiser in New Hampshire, Biden encouraged Democrats to "remind our base constituency to stop whining and get out there and look at the alternatives. This president has done an incredible job. He's kept his promises."

"It is inexcusable for any Democrat or progressive right now to stand on the sidelines in this mid-term election." BARACK OBAMA

Obama himself had a similar message in an interview in Rolling Stone magazine this week.

"It is inexcusable for any Democrat or progressive right now to stand on the sidelines in this mid-term election," he told the magazine.

Gov. Gen. Jean says au revoir, not farewell

Departing Governor General will serve as UN special envoy to Haiti ● New Gov. Gen. to be sworn in Friday

SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Gov. Gen. Michaëlle Jean

Parliamentarians and senators are paying tribute to Gov. Gen. Michaëlle Jean as she winds up her five-year term as Canada's vice-regal this week.

Jean was feted by the speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate in the Hall of Honour, then spoke of her work breaking down solitudes and building bridges.

Canada's federal political scene is marked by sharp partisan and regional divisions, but Jean told the assembled MPs and senators that in her experience, the country speaks in a voice of hope and seeks to broaden its horizons.

Fewer than two dozen of Parliament's 308 MPs attended the event, with just three Conservative cabinet ministers, a single New Democrat and no Bloc Québécois members in a crowd dominated by Liberals.

Treasury Board president Stockwell Day said Jean has "an amazing ability to touch hearts" and her shoes will be tough to fill at Rideau Hall, but that governor general-designate David Johnston is an amazing Canadian in his own right. Johnston, an academic who serves as president of the University of Waterloo, will be sworn in Friday.

Jean says it is au revoir — not farewell — as she will remain in Ottawa where she will serve as a United Nations special envoy to Haiti.

Blogger gets 19 years in Iran jail for writings

- Iranian-Canadian helped ignite blogging in Iran
- Gave country's reform movement online platform

DAVID COOPER/TORONTO STAR

▶ Iranian-Canadian blogger Hossein Derakhshan

An Iranian court sentenced the founder of one of the first Farsi-language blogs, credited with sparking the boom in Iranian reform bloggers, to more than 19 years in prison for his writings, a news website reported yesterday.

Iranian-Canadian Hossein Derakhshan, 35, was a controversial figure among Iran's blogging community. Writing his blog from Canada, he was initially a critic of Iran's clerical leadership, and in 2006 he visited Israel — Iran's arch-enemy — saying he wanted to act as a bridge between the two countries' peoples.

But he later became a vocal supporter of hardline President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, praising him for standing up to the West and criticizing regime opponents.

Derakhshan then visited Iran in 2008 and was arrested. Over the next two years, he was often held without communication with family or lawyers, according to rights groups.

Paris-based advocacy group Reporters Without Borders said in a statement that "never has such a tough sentence been handed to a blogger in Iran."

"This case, fabricated from start to finish, shows that part of the regime wants to make Hossein Derakhshan into an example."

The group's statement said Derakhshan was paying the price for "internal rivalries and struggles for influence inside the regime. We ask Mahmoud Ahmadinejad to intervene personally to free him as soon as possible."

Mashreghnews.ir reported yesterday that Derakhshan was convicted on charges of co-operation with hostile countries — a reference to the Israel visit — spreading propaganda against the ruling establishment, promotion of counter-revolutionary groups and insulting Islamic thought and religious figures.

Woman's stoning 'on hold': Iran

Mother of two could face stoning for adultery conviction Officials in Iran riled by international outcry

Iran said yesterday no final decision has been made on the fate of a woman who could be executed by stoning on an adultery conviction in a case that has sparked widespread international outrage.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Ramin Mehmanparast said "the judiciary process has not been completed" and once it has, a verdict will be announced.

The outcry from world leaders and human rights activists opposed to the brutality of Sakineh Mohammadi Ashtiani's sentence has riled Iranian officials already deeply at odds with the West over the country's nuclear program.

Iran has tried to shift attention away from the stoning sentence, which it says has been put on hold.

Instead, officials began in August to talk about a separate case in which they say Ashtiani was convicted of being an accomplice in her husband's 2005 murder. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Israeli minister calls for peace with Palestine

Israel's foreign minister called for an intermediate agreement with the Palestinians yesterday, a position directly at odds with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who is trying to reach a final peace deal in the coming year.

Speaking at the annual ministerial meeting of the UN General Assembly, Avigdor Lieberman also said the guiding principle in a final agreement must not be "land-for-peace" but an exchange of land "to better reflect demographic realities."

The prime minister's office immediately distanced Netanyahu from Lieberman's comments.

Defence Minister Ehud Barak said "Lieberman's remarks do not reflect the position of the Israeli government and certainly not the position of the Labor Party." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Black gets new day in court

Former media mogul's lawyer will try to get conviction dropped

Conrad Black's lawyer will appear before an American appeals court today to persuade a panel of judges that the former media mogul's convictions should be dropped.

Defence and prosecution lawyers will make 20-minute arguments before the court in the case against Black and three of his former colleagues.

But Black's lawyer Miguel Estrada says Black is not required and not expected to attend the hearing in Chicago of the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The arguments will be reviewed by a panel of three appellate circuit judges led by Judge Richard Posner, who presided over Black's last appeal and took only 20 days to reach a decision.

The panel will decide how the case against the former Canadian media baron will proceed after the U.S. Supreme Court narrowed the scope of the so-called "honest services fraud" theory and sent his case back to the lower court.

Black's lawyer argues that theory was instrumental in securing a conviction against Black, but does not apply in Black's case.

Black is free on bail after spending more than two years in a Florida prison.

Corus courts women viewers from new HQ

Corus Quay brings together 24 television services, three radio stations and more than 1,100 employees

Corus Entertainment Inc. chief executive John Cassaday says the media company sees plenty of opportunity to grow in the popular female-skewed speciality TV channel market as advertisers push to sell more products to women.

"Even within the broad segment of women-targeted networks there's lots of opportunity," Cassaday said.

"I'm sure there will be a young-girl-oriented kids stations in the future as we begin to see greater segmentation and TV starts to look more like the cereal aisle."

$80M

Corus CEO John Cassaday said the $80-million sale of 11 Corus stations in Quebec to Montreal-based Cogeco effectively pays for Corus Quay.

Cassaday helped open Corus' new Toronto-based broadcast headquarters yesterday, consolidating 11 different facilities throughout the city under one roof.

A growing number of those operations are leaning more towards female audiences.

Cassaday has become a champion for a new kind of women's movement — one on the television screens where Corus has become a leader in channels aimed at females.

It owns handfuls of femme-themed channels including Cosmo, targeted at 18- to 25-year-olds, and Viva, more for the baby boomers.

Cassaday said despite the growing lineup of female-skewed stations he doesn't see the market being oversaturated.

Stimulus spending unpopular

More than half the people in some of the world's biggest economies are opposed to their governments spending money in stimulus programs, according to a BBC World Service poll published yesterday.

The broadcaster said in its poll of more than 22,000 people in 22 countries, the strongest opposition for increased government spending to boost the economy was in countries that have already seen stimulus programs, such as Germany, France and the United States. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KATY'S CLEAVAGE CAUSES KERFUFFLE

Just sayin'

PAUL SULLIVAN

Katy Perry, the extravagantly endowed pop tart who became a star with the hit I Kissed A Girl, and more recently, California Gurls, is not a hit with the parents of the tykes who watch Sesame Street.

Her, um, duet with Elmo (he's the little red guy who likes to get tickled) was yanked from the program after numerous parental complaints about her outfit — or lack of it.

Like many hot celebs before her, Katy agreed to go on the iconic kiddies show and frolic with the Muppets. In her skit with Elmo they are supposed to play dress-up, but Elmo, shy guy that he is, gets all flustered and runs away.

You can't tell he's blushing because he's all red all the time, but as Miss Katy's unfit outfit emphasizes her endowments, Elmo likely can't take it all in.

"You can see her t–!" complained parental America. And the people who run Sesame Street listened so now you have to go to YouTube with several million other grownup kids to watch it. After all, Miss Katy's t– are hardly appropriate viewing for children ages one to six.

Meanwhile, what were they thinking (or thinking with)? Rumour has it the producer responsible for the lapse will be replaced by Oscar the Grouch, not so easily dazzled by décolletage.

"... but Elmo, shy guy that he is, gets all flustered and runs away."

And then you have to think about the impact on the other Muppets. Puppets are people, too. Consider the Count, who loves to count, but when Miss Katy is around he can never get past "two."

Or Big Bird, who is always eight years old, grows up in a hurry. Size matters.

Or Kermit, who is green with envy, and would not run away like Elmo. "I like to dress up!" he croaks.

If you think the above is bad, you should have seen the Saturday Night Live segment over the weekend, guest starring, guess who? Katy Perry. Brought to you by the numbers "38" and the letters "Double D."

I know, I know. I should be getting all censorious and fulminate about the rampant sexualization of small children — and it's true, the loss of innocence comes soon enough without it being forced on kids before they are emotionally ready to handle it.

But Katy Perry has been such a good sport about the whole thing — and why wouldn't she be? The Muppet kerfuffle made her a top search on Google and Yahoo and after Saturday Night Live, she is booked on the Simpsons. Fifteen minutes, baby!

And if all else fails, she is welcome in Mr. Sullivan's neighbourhood any time.

No need to apologize

Worth mentioning

As usual, when scientific research and being a man intersect it's a good news/bad news thing.

The good news: Researchers at the University of Waterloo have finally determined why your husband won't apologize. It's because he doesn't think he's done anything wrong, whereas you think everything that you, he and everyone else does is sketchy.

Waterloo psychologists Karina Schumann and Michael Ross asked 66 people (33 women and 33 men) to keep track of how many times they apologized for anything over a 12-day period.

Making amends

They found women both apologized more and felt they had caused offence more. We're talking, "Sorry for bumping into you" sort of transgressions, rather than the "Sorry for accidentally poisoning your cat" sort.

Men, on the other hand, felt they had caused offence less, and therefore apologized less. But both genders apologized at the same rate and just as effusively if they believed an apology was owed.

In most cases, both sexes apologized for roughly 80 per cent of the offences they caused. This seems to put the cliché to rest that men refuse to apologize for anything lest it dent their fragile egos.

Metro Minute at Mount Pleasant

There's a reason cemeteries are a popular place to go for an afternoon stroll: Between the peacefulness, the solemnity, and the beautifully landscaped grounds, they can be a haven from the busy downtown racket.

Next time you're looking for a scenic route, you may want to check out Mount Pleasant Cemetery at 375 Mount Pleasant Rd. It is arguably Toronto's most beautiful and most illustrious resting ground, with its noted architecture and host of famous remains. William Lyon Mackenzie lies amongst the slew of legendary Canadians, and remains the sole prime minister to be buried in our fair city.

Street Dancing jumps off screen

British actress Nichola Burley stars in upbeat 3-D flick ◆ Shooting in 3-D 'mostly the same as shooting a regular movie' ◆ Burley's background in dance a plus for the role

SUBMITTED

Living in 3-D

"It was mostly the same as shooting a regular movie except that we might do things like throw a hat at the camera or do your moves towards the camera, which initially feels strange because you're normally supposed to ignore the camera. There were monitors with glasses so we could look at what we shot in 3-D while we were shooting, which was amazing. But they intentionally tried to not let the actors see too much of that because they didn't want us to be excited or distracted by the 3-D, but focus on making the film as a whole." PHIL BROWN

PHIL BROWN
FOR METRO CANADA

Nichola Burley is best known for her appearances in British horror movies and thrillers like Donkey Punch and Kicks, but on Friday audiences will be treated to a much lighter side of the actress in StreetDance 3-D (no points for guessing what it's about).

For Burley it was an opportunity to finally play a role that was close to herself.

"There are a lot of gritty films in England and many of the scripts I read are quite twisted and dark," Burley told Metro. "I've always wanted to do something positive and uplifting because that's the kind of person I am naturally. I knew it would be so much fun to do something like this."

The film is miles away from the bloody work she's done recently, but not outside of her realm of experience. Burley actually danced for years before falling into acting.

"I've always wanted to do something positive and uplifting because that's the kind of person I am naturally."
NICHOLA BURLEY

"I studied dance until I was 18 and then went to the Northern School of Contemporary Dance," Burley said. "I never wanted to act, I always wanted to dance, but a casting director came to the school to do general auditions for film and I got into it that way. I thought it was just a one off opportunity and went back to school after. But I got lucky and actually hadn't even danced in five years before making this movie."

The experience in dance and film acting obviously made Burley a prime candidate for the film, but she admitted to being unfamiliar with the street-dance style before shooting. A bit of a problem since she plays a character who trains a troupe of ballerinas in street dancing.

"It was very challenging. I knew absolutely nothing about it before we started and had to learn everything in six weeks," admitted the actress. "I probably looked more like one of the struggling ballet dancers in the film to be honest."

Josh Brolin makes Dark Stranger role his own

SUBMITTED

▶ Josh Brolin in a scene from You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger.

▶ Actor plays a novelist with writer's block and a taste for women ▶ Brolin says couldn't play Woody if tried

RICHARD CROUSE
FOR METRO CANADA

Early on in the shoot for You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger, Woody Allen's latest exploration of love and neurosis, star Josh Brolin told the director he wouldn't try and play a thinly disguised version of Woody Allen in the movie, like Kenneth Branagh in Celebrity or even Scarlett Johansson in Scoop.

"I know some people have tried to (play the Woody Allen character)," he says. "I don't understand why. Everybody writes from who they are, but I think because Woody has acted in his films, and is choosing not to act in this film, therefore you are taking his place. I didn't see it that way."

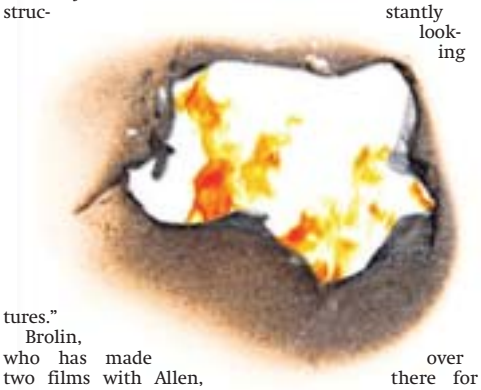
"I know some people have tried to (play the Woody Allen character). I don't understand why. Everybody writes from who they are, but I think because Woody has acted in his films, and is choosing not to act in this film, therefore you are taking his place. I didn't see it that way."
JOSH BROLIN

The director was fine with that, in fact, he told Brolin to make the role his own. "Then I'd do a take," says Brolin, "and he'd say, 'You changed a word. You said cannot. The script says can't.' I'd say, 'You're not serious are you?' and he'd say, 'Yes, you broke the contraction.' I said, 'I thought you just said to make the part my own.' He said, 'I know. But the script says can't.'"

Such is life on set with a genius.

Brolin, however, does have what most people would consider the Woody Allen role in the film; the part Woody might have played if he was 30 years younger. As a novelist with writer's block and a taste for women, the character Roy has the bulk of the film's funny lines and best scenes, but Brolin says he couldn't play Allen if he tried.

"Woody and I both said, 'I could never pretend to be you nor could you possibly pretend to be me.' If there are two more opposite people on this planet it is me and Woody Allen. For various reasons; which is why I think we come together and work together as well as we do, because we have the same sensibilities. We just have different structures."



Brolin, who has made two films with Allen, says when he watched You Will Meet a Tall Dark Stranger, he wanted to slap Roy. "To me he is pathetic. He's not the most redeeming character out there. The grass is greener on the other side and he is constantly looking over there for notoriety and fame and all that. It's a strange character and when he asked me to play it, I was like, 'Why? Why me?' But I'm very happy I got to do it."

Director spins a new tradition in vampire flick, Let Me In

SUBMITTED

▶ Director Matt Reeves on set.

"As a young person horror films terrified me," says Let Me In director Matt ReeveS.

"To this day if you were to show me a picture of Linda Blair in her Regan MacNeil getup, and I wasn't prepared the hair would stand up on the back of my neck and my blood would run cold. I would have a visceral reaction, so it's kind of ironic that that's what I do now. I make genre films, and yet there is something about it that is a very exciting thing to do."

Audiences and critics were certainly excited by his first film, Cloverfield, a movie one writer called "the closest a film has ever gotten to a roller-coaster ride." It was a wham-bam-thank-you-ma'am reinvention of the "big monster" movie that mixed Godzilla with the immediacy of reality TV. His new film, a remake of Let the Right One In, the Swedish art house hit about a vampire trapped in a 12-year-old body and her bullied neighbour, is less frenetic, but throws a new spin on the vampire tale.

"It is a vampire film in a different tradition," says Reeves. "That has everything to do with [novelist] John Lindqvist's story. It is an incredible story in that he takes the vampire genre and uses it as a way to describe the pain of adolescence. It is a strange thing to say, but I found in reading it, and in the Swedish version and in what we tried to do, I actually think that it is a very realistic sort of tale even though it is a vampire tale. This film has a bit of naturalism to it."

Let Me In, Cloverfield and the films that frightened him as a child, he says, are effective because they are "about something other than what the surface part is. The metaphor they are using is a way to explore a lot of real and frightening things and to explore our own fears and that's why you can make a movie about a giant monster trashing New York and it's really not about that at all. That is what makes it challenging and interesting as a filmmaker." RICHARD CROUSE

Titanic star dead at 100

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Gloria Stuart

Gloria Stuart, the 1930s Hollywood leading lady who years later became the oldest Academy Award acting nominee for her role as the spunky survivor in Titanic, has died. She was 100.

Stuart died of respiratory failure Sunday night at her Los Angeles home, her daughter, Sylvia Thompson, said Monday. The actress had been diagnosed with lung cancer five years ago and had beaten breast cancer about 20 years ago, Thompson said.

In her youth, Stuart was a blond beauty who starred in B pictures as well as some higher-profile ones such as The Invisible Man, Busby Berkeley's Gold Diggers of 1935 and two Shirley Temple movies, Poor Little Rich Girl and Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm. But by the mid-1940s she had retired.

She resumed acting in the 1970s, doing occasional TV and film work. But Stuart's later career would have remained largely a footnote if James Cameron had not chosen her for his 1997 epic about the doomed luxury liner that struck an iceberg and sank on its maiden voyage in 1912.

Stuart co-starred as Rose Calvert, the 101-year-old survivor played by Kate Winslet as a young woman. Both earned Oscar nominations, Winslet as best actress and Stuart as supporting actress.

Make your holiday dreams come true.

Pay yourself first and get away soon.

Maria Contreras
RBC Royal Bank® Product Manager, Savings Accounts

The sun, sand and surf or a clean air nature adventure. We all dream of taking time out to rest and recharge. Well, you can make that dream a reality, and it's easier than you think. It simply calls for the right plan – one built around paying yourself first without feeling the pinch. Start by determining three things:

Where do you want to go? In other words, decide what kind of adventure you want to save for. A romantic getaway? A sightseeing road trip with your family? A long weekend that's all relaxation? Wherever and whatever you decide is entirely up to you, because, after all, this is about rewarding yourself with an escape you'll never forget.

When do you want to go there? Is it six months from now? A year? Once you've figured out where you want to go and for how long, you'll have a better idea how much to save each week or month. But what if saving, say, $25 a week for the next year seems unrealistic?

Where can you find extra funds? What you earn vs. what you spend over a three-month period is a good place to start. Include everything from rent or mortgage payments to your daily coffee fix. Over time, you'll see a few items you can save on. For instance, one less latte or takeout lunch could save you $5 a day. That's $25 each workweek or $1,300 a year – it adds up fast!

Don't you deserve to pay yourself first? Sure, spending a little less every day can help. But, most importantly, set up a separate, dedicated savings account with automatic online transfers right after you get your paycheque – that way you'll always make sure to put aside funds you need to help reach your goal, right from the start.

So get on your way to getting away. And start saving for it, today.

4 SIMPLE STEPS

1. Decide where you want to go and a realistic time line to save the funds to get there
2. Look closely at how much you're spending and where you can save
3. Open a dedicated savings account
4. Set up automatic online transfers to pay yourself first, right after payday

Hammer brings his A-game to the Social Network

◗ High-calibre cast inspired each other on set of new movie about Facebook ◗ Opens nationwide Oct. 1

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Armie Hammer faced some interesting acting challenges for the Social Network. Playing both Cameron and Tyler Winklevoss, the identical twins who claimed Mark Zuckerberg stole the idea for Facebook from them, Hammer gets some of the best lines in the movie — and spends most of his scenes arguing with himself. Metro caught up with Hammer at the Harvard Club in New York.

When you get a script by Aaron Sorkin directed by David Fincher, what goes through your head?

To think about the fact that you are working with Fincher and you are doing two parts, if you show up carrying that anxiety with you, you won't get the same performance. We really had to trust Fincher and let go of the fact that he was Fincher and just do whatever he asked.

The real Winklevoss twins were at the premiere. Did you meet them before you made the movie?

I met them afterward. I'm glad I didn't meet them before, because I feel like I would've been tempted to do almost like an imitation of these guys who I don't know. I know the characters in the script better than I know the real guys.

And what was their response to the film?

From what I could tell, it was positive. Honestly, I just think they're happy that their side of the story is being told, you know?

On Oprah, Mark Zuckerberg referred to the film as a work of fiction. Do you see it as a true story?

If I were Mark Zuckerberg, I would definitely try to play this off as fiction as well. I mean, I'm not surprised that's what he said. Do I see this as a work of nonfiction? Um... yes, but in the sense that truth is relative. So to each of the characters as it relates to them, they are telling the truth and this is their true story. But it's up to the audience to take these three perspectives and sort of figure out what they think.

Doing it 'Nucky's Way'

Atlantic City councilman wants to name street after controversial subject of HBO's Boardwalk Empire

Real-life political and rackets boss — and current posthumous TV star — Enoch "Nucky" Johnson may finally get a street named after him.

The subject of the hit HBO series Boardwalk Empire, Johnson ruled Atlantic City during Prohibition, ensuring that vice flourished here, and the cash was spread around freely.

City Councilman Dennis Mason told The Press of Atlantic City he'll introduce a measure to rename a one-block section of Belmont Avenue — near a hotel where Johnson used to live — as "Nucky's Way."

Mason is not put off by Johnson's eventual conviction and imprisonment on tax charges.

"It was just tax evasion," Mason told the newspaper. "He didn't actually murder anyone."

Belmont Avenue runs alongside the Ritz, a high-rise condominium building that was once the Ritz-Carlton, a luxury hotel where Johnson lived and rented out the entire ninth floor.

Other high-profile visitors to the hotel included U.S. Presidents Warren G. Harding and Calvin Coolidge, and gangster Al Capone, a close pal of Nucky's.

Mason acknowledged the move is a ploy to generate more interest in Atlantic City among tourists. He said he hopes to organize an event in November in which people will don 1920s clothing and red carnations, a trademark of Johnson and the HBO character based on him, played by Steve Buscemi.

The ethical bar to getting a street named after someone in Atlantic City is not all that high. The city has already named streets for Louis Kuehnle, a city political boss in the early 20th century convicted of accepting kickbacks, and Don King, the boxing promoter who was convicted of second-degree murder before getting it downgraded to manslaughter.

Mason said Nucky held no monopoly on corruption in Atlantic City, noting a slew of recent arrests and prison terms of City Council members.

"I mean, if everybody gets real, I'm sure there are a lot more people that did something (illegal)," he said. "We have bad people in this government now."

Danza gets an 'A' for effort

When former sitcom star Tony Danza began teaching English at a Philadelphia high school, no one really knew what to expect. Not even Tony Danza.

Certainly school officials were holding their breath after the district greenlighted Teach, an A&E reality show premiering Friday that chronicles Danza's year at the head of a class.

Danza, with no teaching experience, was enthusiastic but overwhelmed when filming began last fall at Northeast High School. His students seemed excited but puzzled; some had no idea who he was. ("Wasn't he in, like, Cheers?" one teen asks in the first episode. Um, no.)

While critics contended that education was being sacrificed to benefit the actor best known for Taxi and Who's the Boss?, students and administrators say "Mr. D" ended up making the grade.

"You're hoping that all the new teachers grow the same way he did," Assistant Principal Sharon McCloskey said.

Teach comes at a time when education reform is a huge topic in public policy and popular culture, from President Barack Obama's Race to the Top grant program to major film documentaries like Waiting for "Superman" and Race to Nowhere.

Danza underwent weeks of prep and new-teacher orientation before starting at Northeast, a diverse 3,400-student public high school in a blue-collar neighbourhood. His class of 26 sophomores ran the gamut from jocks and divas to brains and immigrants.

FREDERICK M. BROWN/GETTY IMAGES

▶ Tony Danza

Initially, it's rough going for the boss of Room 230. Danza talks too much and gets corrected by a student in front of the class. He deals with cheating and violence, meets with parents of obstinate students, and tries to balance discipline with empathy — all while teaching Of Mice and Men and other books to teens with varying academic abilities.

It's overwhelming. Danza cries several times in the first few episodes.

"I can't help it," Danza told The Associated Press. "You see yourself in them. You want them to learn from your mistakes and you can't get it through to them."

Danza also threw himself into civic life and extracurricular activities. He helped coach Northeast's football team, organized a student variety show, sang the national anthem at a Phillies game, and participated in a citywide clean-up and a poetry slam.

Youth making positive changes

Free the Children's We Day will take over the Air Canada Centre tomorrow, and will feature speeches and performances from social activists, cultural icons, entertainers and global leaders.

The event is an opportunity for youth to learn how they can create positive change in the world — and in their community. Taking part in the event is Nobel Peace Prize winner Betty Williams, a co-founder of Community of Peace People, an organization dedicated to promoting a peaceful resolution in Northern Ireland.

We recently had the opportunity to ask Free the Children's Craig Kielburger about ways youth can also help create change in their communities.

How can a teenager, who may feel small and alone, and not have any resources, help to create change in their community?

The most important equation they don't teach in school is Issue + Gift = Change. Many young people think they have to be philanthropists or full-time activists to create change. The truth is, all of us, regardless of age, race or resources have a gift.

My advice to teenagers is to find that issue — you know, the one that you really want to do something about — and use your gifts to raise awareness and make an impact. If you're an athlete, organize a sports event where attendees bring a non-perishable food item for a local food bank. If you're an artist, create awareness-raising posters about poverty or violence in your local community.

• Due to unforeseen circumstances, Nobel Peace Prize winner Wangari Maathai, who was featured in yesterday's We Day story, will not be able to take part in this year's event.

Time Magazine said Billy Elliot is 'The Best Musical of the Decade"

JOHN KEILLOR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

The four lads starring as Billy Elliot understand the character they play. They're all highly trained dancers. This musical is about a boy from a small mining town who wants to perform ballet, even though his parents aren't supportive.

"The story teaches kids to try different things, even if other people don't approve," explains Myles Erlick, 12, in the Canon Theatre foyer. He studies at Canada's National Ballet School. "It doesn't matter what other people think; the important thing is to focus on what you want."

Also students at Canada's NBS are Cesar Corrales, 14, and Marcus Pei, 12.

"That's right," says Cuban-born Corrales, "Billy Elliot sacrificed a lot. He left home to pursue his dream, like I did."

"Exactly," adds Pei, from Iowa. "If someone told me Billy Elliot was a true story, I'd believe it. Sometimes others just can't understand."

J.P. Viernes, 14, agrees, "It's not so rare to have to fight for what you want," says this dance student of Shely Pack-Manning, who is a California native.

The lads all seem immune to self doubt: All four of them will have careers as professional ballet dancers. J.P. also likes science, and Myles is willing to do a bit of acting, but dance is their shared passion.

Producer Eric Fellner, who is more famous for involvement in films, like Fargo and Four Weddings and a Funeral, shares the boys' enthusiasm for this musical's message.

"When I first read the script, I wept openly, and I normally don't do that," says Fellner. "We rather naively attacked this project before knowing much about the economics of music theatre, but we knew it would be a phenomenal show. "

"She's the happiest we've ever seen her. He really brings out a wonderful, carefree side to her that we haven't seen for years." Winslet split with husband Sam Mendes in March before taking up with Dowler in July.

West Coast beckons winter storm chasers

Tofino storms offer magnificent sensory experience for adventurers and sybarites alike

Charles McDiarmid recalls being awake in his parents' remote West Coast cabin listening to low buzzing sounds reverberating from huge pieces of driftwood being tossed against the shore by the winter waves off Tofino on Vancouver Island.

The low pitch of the vibrating storm-beaten logs was powerful and magnificent, says McDiarmid, and the everlasting drone contributed to a West Coast travel phenomenon: Winter storm watching.

McDiarmid, whose family first built a cabin in the area in 1955, became convinced others would also be fascinated by the cleansing experience of a West Coast winter storm.

Since 1996, his family has operated the Wickaninnish Inn at Chesterman Beach near Tofino, about 400 kilometres northwest of Victoria. The Tofino area is good for more than a dozen major storms over the winter, from mid-November until February.

"It's a good feeling to be snuggled up in a nice, warm, comfortable environment seeing Mother Nature unfold."
CHARLES MCDIARMID

There is no land between the West Coast of Vancouver Island and the east coast of Japan, which allows the swells to build. Many are 10-metres high when they hit shallow water and explode against the rocks.

"We're such an urban society and Mother Nature in the city is generally an inconvenience," says McDiarmid. "Here, there is no such thing as bad weather."

But winter storm watching is not just for outdoorsy types who put on gum boots, rain slickers and head for kilometers of open sandy beach.

Many watch the storms unfold from a safe, warm fireside vantage point wrapped in a warm blanket. "It's a good feeling to be all snuggled up in a nice, warm comfortable environment and seeing Mother Nature unfold for you," says McDiarmid.

North Carolina's top private golf courses

- Fall is perfect time to test out the high-calibre McConnell Golf Trail
- Courses boast some of the slickest greens in the region

It's a steamy, sun-baked land steeped in sweet tea and basted in barbecue sauce, a golf-mad corner of the world where fairways and food go hand-in-hand, especially if you're a club-wielding carnivore.

Let South Carolina have Myrtle Beach, with its teeming crowds and garish 24-hour neon. If you're looking for a civilized, upscale golf experience where the greens are speedy and the steaks are falling off the plate, look to the Old North state, the side of the Carolinas that's closer to Canada.

Fall is the perfect time for thicker-blooded Canadian players to check out North Carolina's McConnell Golf Trail — a collection of high-calibre country clubs owned and operated by local business magnate John McConnell, who caught the golf bug in 2003 after cashing out a multimillion-dollar health software business.

He started with Raleigh Country Club, a stately, old-world Donald Ross layout in the heart of the city for which it's named.

The club was bankrupt and doomed to urban sprawl when McConnell rescued the last course Ross — best known for famous U.S. Open venues like Oakmont and Pinehurst No. 2 — designed.

From there, McConnell rounded out his collection with Pete Dye's telltale railroad ties and dastardly par-3s at Cardinal Country Club, Arnold Palmer's laid-back style in Musgrove Mill, and the classic American parkland style of Tom Fazio in both the challenging Treyburn Country Club and the charming Old North State Club.

To introduce the private-club delights of North Carolina, McConnell Golf offers a year-round package deal for groups of four or eight golfers: Three, five or seven-day tours.

Accommodations, transportation to the courses and most meals, prepared by private chefs no less, are included.

When the weather starts to turn north of the border, the temperatures in the Carolinas are downright hospitable, to say nothing of the locals, whose southern accents often make it a hard place to leave. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Atlantic City's 1920s revival

What The Sopranos did for a pork store in northern New Jersey and Sex and the City did for a Manhattan cupcake shop, Atlantic City is hoping Boardwalk Empire does for the seaside gambling resort.

Nothing is too trivial to become a tourist trap, as long as it appears in a hit TV show.

Sopranos fans packed tour buses to visit spots like the pork store and a strip club, and girls-night-out devotees planned trips around watering holes and shoe stores featured in Sex and the City.

Now, with Boardwalk Empire — the HBO series set in Prohibition-era Atlantic City — the resort is ready for its close-up.

And with critics hailing the series as perhaps the best of the fall TV season, the 12-episode series could keep Atlantic City in the nation's consciousness far longer and better than any ad could.

"It's an hour-long commercial for Atlantic City, top-of-the mind awareness," said Don Marrandino, eastern regional president of Harrah's Entertainment Inc., which owns four of Atlantic City's 11 casinos. "People will want to come here and see it for themselves, and we need to take full advantage of that."

The attention comes not a moment too soon for the second-largest gambling resort in the U.S.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Contestants in the first Miss America pageant as they line up for the judges in Atlantic City, N.J., Sept. 1921.

Atlantic City is in the fourth straight year of a revenue decline brought on by competition from casinos in neighbouring states, as well as a continuing poor economy that has people less willing to risk their cash at the tables and slot machines.

Its revenues, after hitting a high of $5.2 billion in 2006, fell to $3.9 billion by the end of last year and nearly 9,000 casino workers have lost their jobs since then.

In this context, the free publicity from a smash hit TV show is a godsend, giving the city's resorts and casinos a golden opportunity to cash in.

And many are doing just that, offering a slew of promotions. For a full list of what's available where, go to atlanticcityni.com.

The day the glitter died

Once almost synonymous with Las Vegas, the Liberace Museum is closing its doors after 31 years. The past and uncertain future of this kitschy monument to 'Mr. Showmanship'

KATHLEEN SQUIRES
TRAVEL@METRONEWS.CA

One of Vegas's biggest spectacles will close next month. No, a Cirque du Soleil show is not going dark, and the Bellagio fountains will continue to dance. A lesser-known, yet no-less-glitzy landmark shutters on Oct. 17: the Liberace Museum. Financial concerns were cited as the culprit by Liberace Foundation president Jack A. Rappaport, when asked about the fate of the two clay-tiled buildings located a few miles off the Strip.

The next few weeks will be the public's last chance to check out the flamboyant musician's personal collection, including pianos coveted by Elton John, jewelry fit for a posse of hip-hoppers, a wardrobe that makes drag queens look plain and a car collection that provided grander entrances than Lady Gaga at a Yankee game. Everything that created the image of "Mr. Showmanship" is here.

If you go

Currently, the museum is open daily, and the gift shop will sell off its stock of CDs, replica jewelry, various kitsch and even cookbooks until the neon piano atop the museum dims on the 17th.

▶ Bid farewell to the King of Bling before the Liberace Museum closes on Oct. 17. For more information, visit liberace.org.

Wisconsin native Walter Valentino Liberace sold 60 million records and was once the highest-paid entertainer in the world; yet many under the age of 40 offer a blank stare at the mention of his name, which would account for the museum's dwindling crowds. (It once drew as many as 450,000 visitors a year, as many as Hoover Dam. The board says the number is now 50,000.)

The showman himself opened the museum in 1979 to share his love of razzle-dazzle and to promote the profile of his foundation, formed three years earlier to foster new talent in the creative arts.

His legacy will live on in the Liberace Foundation, which has granted over $6 million in scholarships for over 2,700 students. The collection's future, however, is less clear.

There is talk of items such as a pink cape made from turkey feathers and a rhinestone-encrusted Roadster going on a tour, rumblings of it re-opening elsewhere and rumors of the Strip's performers coming together for a farewell gala.

Jay-Z, Coldplay to do joint show

Jay-Z and Coldplay plan to share the stage in Las Vegas as New Year's Eve headliners at the Cosmopolitan of Las Vegas casino-resort.

Cosmopolitan officials said Monday that the music superstars would also play solo sets with the performances broadcast on the hotel's marquee overlooking the Las Vegas Strip.

The Cosmopolitan says the concert is part of a three-day invitation-only celebration roughly two weeks after the resort opens.

The $3.9-billion resort owned by Deutsche Bank is scheduled to open Dec. 15.

Cosmopolitan officials say the New Year's Eve weekend will also include a surprise performance on the resort's pool deck, which overlooks Las Vegas Boulevard.

Well I'm blown away

Buying a travel hairdryer has become an essential part of the ritual of going on vacation. We tested some of the market leaders.

PAUL BALDWIN
TRAVEL@METRONEWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS IN LONDON

Nothing says "I'm going on vacation!" quite like the buying of a travel hairdryer. If you analyse it closely (and yes ladies, I'm kind of looking at you right now) you don't really need one. It's not like your everyday hairdryer couldn't comfortably fit into just about any suitcase or rucksack on the planet. But maybe that's not the point. Like over-expensive designer sunglasses and ridiculous sandals you will only ever wear once, it's just part of the "get-away feel good factor." We've picked our current favourites, all available from amazon.com

1 CUTEST CORIOLISS MINI VINTAGE TRAVEL DRYER UKMVF FLORAL, $49

This small but perfectly formed dryer, with its retro styling and super-cutesy floral livery (very Kath Kitson) had the females in the office swooning. It is very good looking.

Luckily it also performs. Some weird technology means the 88 watt motor pushes through more air than it should and drying is, ahem, a breeze. It's dual voltage, comes with pouch, strap and concentrator, but mainly it comes in three brilliantly pretty designs.

2 BEST COMBO VO5 'ON THE GO' TWIN PACK, $58

This straightener/dryer combo is teeny and designed specifically for travel. Either item might comfortably fit in a handbag, though both might be a squeeze. The dryer claims to have MaxAir Technology with a ceramic/tourmaline coating on the grille which produces ions for added shine. In truth it's a bit underpowered for everyday use. The mini straightener on the other hand works fantastically well.

3 SMALLEST OPAL LONDON HAIRDRYER TO GO, $29

Now this really is small. At 11 cms long it is almost dwarfed by the plug. It's also very pink. The handle has a three-position power switch, two position voltage dial and the mains power cable, and it folds flat. It all packs into little cotton drawstring pouch which could feasibly fit in your jeans pocket. It will dry your hair pretty effectively while taking up no more space than your Blackberry.

4 LEAST CLAIM TO BE A 'TRAVEL' HAIRDRYER REMINGTON STYLE D5005 COMPACT DIFFUSER 2000, $29

Okay, it's slightly smaller than its average domestic equivalent but it's pretty hard to see how it qualifies as a 'travel' hairdryer. That said, it's a very competent performer and boasts 2000 watts — unheard of in most travel dryers. Remington also throw in a diffuser and concentrator, which is nice but it's all extra baggage space. A neat touch however is the True Cold Shot button which gives a blast of cool air.

5 BEST SELLER SASSOON LIMITED EDITION GREEN VS526LEUK1 TRAVEL HAIR DRYER, $29

This dryer is currently a big favourite on Amazon and with good reason. It's compact (rather than small), powerful (with 1800 watts at its disposal) and has two heat and speed settings, folding handle, and a cool shot button. Perhaps more winningly it comes in a range of 'pop art' colours. A sound choice. Dual voltage, storage bag and travel adapter.

▶ A spectator views an oil on canvas called Marines Call It That 2,000 Yard Stare, by Tom Lea, at the Art of the American Soldier exhibit at Philadelphia's National Constitution Center.

100 years of war art exhibit

For as long as the United States has gone to war, it has sent soldiers marching off to battle armed with paintbrushes, canvas, ink and sketchbooks.

With little public recognition, they have captured the sights and sounds of combat since the American Revolution.

Examples of Army soldiers' efforts over the past century will be on display in a new Philadelphia exhibit entitled Art of the American Soldier being held at the National Constitution Center.

There will be gallery talks, an audio tour with soldiers telling their war stories, and workshops and lesson plans to complement the exhibition.

An online art gallery also encourages veterans from all branches of the military to submit their own art expressing their personal war experiences.

More than 250 paintings and sketches from World War I to the present provide a glimpse of the daily lives of soldiers, from the canteen to the stark, noisy and chaotic battlefield.

Many of the pieces in this exhibit have never before been on public view.

The exhibition runs from now through Jan. 10, 2011. For more information, go to constitutioncenter.org.

How to do comfort food the right way

Grilled cheese sandwiches are right up there with the best of cool-weather comfort foods and this is the time of year to enjoy them.

During a break from raking leaves or watching a football game on television, grilled cheese on bread or buns is just the solution to satisfy rumbling tummies, says a chef who recently won first prize for his creation at a national competition.

"When you get into cooler weather you want food that makes you feel good and toasted cheese sandwiches do the job," says Michael Howell, owner and chef of Tempest Restaurant in Wolfville, N.S.

The cook-off competition held in Toronto and run by Dairy Farmers of Canada pitched four chefs against one another to come up with the best grilled cheese sandwich.

Howell won for his Panini Toscano recipe using havarti and prosciutto on a ciabatta bun.

In fact, he and his wife, who have a booth at the Wolfville Farmers' Market on Saturdays, started serving their customers grilled cheese sandwiches on Texas toast, he says.

His favourite cheese is Gouda "because of its meltability." But he also likes to use havarti and mozzarella when grilling his sandwiches.

▶ A Panini Toscano grilled cheese (recipe below).

Chef Paul Rogalski, co-owner and chef at Calgary's Rouge Restaurant, another contender at the cook-off held during the Canadian National Exhibition last month, is particularly fond of Canadian aged cheddar for his grilled sandwiches.

"I think it is one of the most important and versatile cheeses we have, and just about every Canadian refrigerator has a chunk inside, I bet," he says.

His recipe in the competition was for Cheddar Your Wagons.

"My inspiration for the recipe was to showcase western prairie spirit and to have some fun," he says.

Although processed cheese slices on toast with a bowl of tomato soup may be a childhood memory for some Canadians, Rogalski says he prefers cooking with traditional cheddar cheese rather than processed varieties.

"I love the way it melts," he says. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Low and slow

- Here is a tip from the expert on grilled cheese sandwiches and how to make sure they turn out perfectly.
- "It's about low and slow and allowing the cheese to melt inside the bread," suggests Howell. "I would put a cast-iron skillet on low heat so the sandwich will take a little longer."

Panini Toscano

Ingredients :

- 1 fresh ciabatta bun
- 15 ml lemon aioli
- 1 ripe fig, 4 to 5 slices
- 2 slices prosciutto,
- 2 slices harvarti cheese, 3 mm thick
- 30 g baby arugula
- 1/2 roasted red pepper, peeled and cut into 2-cm slices
- 15 ml balsamic vinaigrette
- Lemon Aioli:
- 50 ml prepared olive oil mayonnaise
- Juice and zest from 1/2 lemon
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- Balsamic Vinaigrette:
- 5 ml balsamic vinegar
- Pinch each salt and pepper
- 2 ml Dijon mustard
- Pinch sugar
- Juice of 1/2 lemon
- 50 ml extra-virgin olive oil

Preparation:

1. Lemon Aioli: In a small bowl, mix together mayonnaise, lemon juice and zest and garlic and let flavours mingle for half an hour.
2. Split fresh ciabatta in half and brush both sides liberally with lemon aioli.
3. Layer 1 slice of havarti cheese on the bottom of the bun, then top with sliced figs, prosciutto, a couple of sprigs of arugula and finish with the other slice of cheese.
4. Top with other side of the bun. Lightly brush outside of bun on both sides with extra-virgin olive oil. Place sandwich in a preheated panini press and grill until cheese is melting and bread is lightly marked.
5. If using a grill or barbecue, place a weight on top of sandwich and flip halfway through cooking.
6. Balsamic Vinaigrette: While sandwich is grilling, in a small bowl, combine vinegar, salt, pepper, Dijon, sugar and lemon juice. Slowly whisk in oil until incorporated.
7. In another small bowl, dress arugula with 15 ml (1 tbsp) of the vinaigrette and place on a plate. Toss two slices of red pepper in same bowl to dress lightly and place on top of salad.
8. When sandwich is ready, remove from press or grill and split in half diagonally.
9. Place around salad and serve immediately. Makes 1 serving. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

internship opportunity

Company cutbacks mean more chances to learn Students are competing with underemployed

DREW HINSHAW
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

It may be the most dull and demeaning chapter in your college or university experience: The grind of interning, showing up as free labour, relearning how to operate a copier or order doughnuts for a meeting.

Neglected interns should be forgiven for wondering if internships are just meaningless hype to splay across a still-sparse résumé. Yet the practice persists.

In fact, they're very necessary. "When you graduate ... now, if you don't have at least two internships on your résumé, you're not hirable," warns The Internship Bible author Samer Hamadeh.

The challenge, he offers, is to glean more from your time than a sentence to paste into your cover letter.

"Your internship is what you make it," agrees CareerBuilder.com coach Allison Nawoj.

Her latest study shows that America's jobless elders may have reached the same conclusion. This fall, she says, undergraduates will compete with the underemployed for nearly a quarter of all open internships.

"Not only has the recession reshaped internships so that they're more applicable to people later in their careers, but for younger workers, internships can mean more than filing papers," she notes. "Companies have scaled back and are relying on interns to fill the gaps."

Consider shadowing the person whose job you'd aim to have.

"See what their jobs entail," Nawoj suggests. "Say, 'Hey, I see you do X, Y, Z. Can I help out with that.'

▶ The challenge for interns is to glean more from the experience than a sentence on your cover letter or resume.

INTERN TO-DO

Seek out a mentor

Don't leave the building without conducting a few tete-a-tetes with potential mentors.

"Pinpoint a few people in the organization whose jobs interest you, and ask them to meet with you," Generation Y career blogger Lindsey Pollak advises.

"Don't miss this opportunity to shoot fish in a barrel. During an internship, you are literally surrounded by informational interview prospects."

METRO

Make Friends

Remember what counts

The best gift with which you can strut out of an internship isn't the résumé padding or connections — it's the friendships with your fellow interns. "These people are great contacts," Pollak says.

"You never know where your fellow interns are going to end up someday — or who else they know right now."

WHEN DOES A CONTRACTOR BECOME AN EMPLOYEE?

It's workplace law's newest phenomenon: employers, happy to unburden themselves from the various costs and liabilities associated with their employees, increasingly retaining "contractors" to perform the same services their employees did before.

Often their former employees are transformed into contractors and these "contractors," content to pay less taxes than they did before, are not about to complain. However, this arrangement is often a fraud.

When these arrangements are challenged, sometimes many years later, courts are apt to find that the contractors were truly employees. No surprise there. The arrangement represented little else than a "label." Seldom will a label be sufficient. What actually matters is how the parties behaved.

When is a contractor actually an employee?

Despite signing an agreement stating that he was a contractor, sales agent Jose Santos was actually an employee. Over a 20-year period, Santos worked for a variety of different employers, selling vacuum cleaners and accessories manufactured by HMI industries Inc. When he eventually signed a contract with HMI directly, he was required to follow its policies and procedures, as well, as report to a director of sales.

Since contractors are not generally entitled to severance, when HMI ended the relationship, Santos sued for wrongful dismissal, claiming that he was actually their employee. Recently, the Quebec Court of Appeal heard his case and it agreed. The Court stated that it was not bound by what the parties called themselves, but rather, how they behaved. Here, Santos was closely supervised by HMI and was under its control and direction. Although he had some independence in how he performed his job, it was not enough freedom to characterize him as truly independent from HMI.

Employers and employees continue to get this wrong. If you want to employ or be employed as a contractor, then do as follows.

Ensure that there is a clear separation between the employer's business and the contractor. Permit the contractor to perform services for others and to maintain genuine discretion over how and when the job is performed. Even an airtight independent contractor agreement will not be reliable unless the parties stick to what it says.

Technology a smart investment

Most small business owners see technology as another expense, but what if it can save money — particularly when it comes to operating costs?

According to a recent survey by Angus Reid, 84 per cent of small business owners are focused on reducing wasted time and cutting costs. This was the case for Niki Brinton, founder of Cupid's Gourmet Cupcakes, which is why she turned to technology for help.

Brinton previously wrote everything on paper, but it was becoming too time consuming and extremely inefficient. To help manage growth, she invested in new technology.

"Today all of our costing, conversions, recipes and inventory ordering are paperless. The time efficiency and cost savings that I get from this one piece of technology is invaluable. I'm certain that my doors would close without it," says Brinton.

Failing grade for student lunches

Lunch box study reveals poor food and drink choices Nearly every lunch contained sugary treats

When dietitian Shannon Crocker agreed to go into four kindergarten classrooms in two Ontario elementary schools and check the contents of the children's lunch boxes, she was dismayed by what she found.

"Many were packed with poor food and drink choices such as cold hot dogs, gummy treats, sugary fruit beverages and packaged cookies," says the Ancaster, Ont., mother of two.

Kindergarten classes were chosen because Ontario began introducing its new Early Learning Program in September, which means thousands of four- and five-year-olds now attend school for a full day.

Crocker adds that many lunches did not provide enough food for the long day the children were at school.

Her project coincides with the marking of World School Milk Day today. This annual international event celebrates the importance of milk in children's diets. It is actively supported and promoted by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

The schools chose to participate in the survey of lunches because Crocker says they want to raise public awareness about the issue.

"Two schools, one in Toronto and the other in Hamilton, were chosen for the project," she says. "The schools are not identified out of respect for the families and the fact that nutritionally poor school lunches is a problem all across Canada."

Crocker and an assistant checked 82 lunches during the survey and found that 85 per cent had no vegetables and almost every container had one sugary treat and some up to five.

"Only five lunches included milk, but most of them had at least one sugary fruit-flavoured drink of little or zero nutritional value," she says.

However, both schools were about to sign on to milk programs for their students in which a dairy delivers cartons to the schools daily, she says.

But Crocker found that most children had only one drink to get them through the day, while "some had nothing to drink at all."

However, she understands there are several reasons lunches may not make the grade.

"If a child doesn't eat much, parents might pack small amounts of food or busy mornings allow little time to assemble lunches," she suggests. "Money may be a factor or there may not have been much food in the fridge that day."

But her major concern is that parents may not understand the direct link between good nutrition and learning.

"As a dietitian what I want to see are the four food groups represented," Crocker say. "That would be a couple of servings of grain products such as whole grains rather than white bread.

"There should also be at least two servings of fruits and vegetables as well as milk or milk alternative such as yogurt or hard cheese."

In her survey, Crocker found processed cheese or yogurt strings, "which are not the most nutritious choices in that food group."

Her final concern is about food safety.

"The majority of lunches were missing cooler packs with 92 per cent without," she says. "And several included spaghetti and meat sauce in plastic containers without a cooler pack to keep the food safe."

Despite the ban on peanuts in the schools because of allergies, peanut butter cookies and other foods containing nuts were found as well, Crocker reveals.

Helping kids get healthy

Jess Haines, assistant professor of Applied Nutrition at the University of Guelph, says it is important to ask what is the role of the provincial government and the schools in making sure that children have healthful foods.

"And can we use these findings to play up the very important role parents have and then to think how best to support families through nutritional education?" Haines asks.

"We must also recognize that kids need to eat more often, so schools should have two nutritional breaks each day.

"Those could be used to create a nutritious environment that allows the children to eat well."

Lasting, layered legacy for Gaston

Tonight marks the final game in Toronto for Blue Jays skipper

YANKEES | BLUE JAYS

Time: 7:07 p.m.
Channel: SNET

There have always seemed to be more darts than laurels for Cito Gaston, even as he guided the Toronto Blue Jays through four American League East titles and consecutive World Series championships.

He won with teams that were supposed to win, something that's very difficult to do, and received very little of the credit while often being second-guessed. He lost with teams that were destined to lose, and received the lion's share of the blame, not all of which was deserved.

Yet as he prepares to leave the dugout for good once the 2010 season ends, he will leave behind a lasting and layered legacy of success built up over two stints covering 12 seasons as manager of the Blue Jays.

His goodbye to Toronto will be marked by today's "Thank You Cito" night in his final home game, a chance to celebrate a career that maybe hasn't been celebrated enough, and achievements that should perhaps have a broader appreciation.

"Being here right now, and being here when we won, I still got criticized a lot even when we won, and I still do right to this day," Gaston said in an interview this week. "I like to look at myself as someone who always treats people the way I want to be treated, and I don't think I've ever treated anyone poorly.

"Maybe you get a couple of guys who don't like the way you look, or don't like whatever and they carried on and people have a tendency to believe what they say. But it's not going to be something I'm going take to bed and worry about."

"People are going to look at you the way (they) want. To me, I care about what the players say about me, and what I want them to always remember is that I never lied to any of them."
CITO GASTON

No, that part is over and done with for the 66-year-old, who heads into semi-retirement and a cushy adviser's job with the Blue Jays on his own terms.

Throughout the leadup to his final week, Gaston has remained the same calm and steady presence he always is, refusing to be drawn into emotional reflections about the past.

Longtime friend and Blue Jays bench coach Nick Leyva says not to be fooled.

"This is killing him inside," he said. "Don't get me wrong, he's ready to retire, but not a lot of people know what this city, what this organization mean to him.

"I know because he's my best friend and I can guarantee I'm going to see some tears at the end."

Contemporaries

- Gaston steps away from the game at the same time as many of his more-celebrated contemporaries like Bobby Cox, Lou Piniella, and perhaps Joe Torre and Tony La Russa.
- Dusty Baker, manager of the Cincinnati Reds and an old friend of Gaston, is bothered the Toronto manager isn't receiving the same sendoff, but notes, "it's unfair, but the world is unfair sometimes."
- "This is something (Gaston) tells me sometimes," Baker adds, "all you can do is be yourself and do the best job you can to satisfy within yourself. That matters more."

A surprising training camp puts Tim Brent in the spotlight, and likely on the Leafs' third line ◗ Kadri, Mitchell face long odds to make the cut

Tim Brent spent part of his media scrum yesterday detailing some of his personal likes and pastimes.

Stuff like hunting and fishing are high on his list of favourite things to do. Those details went missing in team media guides from the four NHL teams he has played for because he has never made a season-opening roster.

Brent's anonymity, though, appears to be on thin ice. The 26-year-old from Cambridge has come from under the radar to the verge of cracking the Leafs opening lineup.

"I grew up a die-hard Leafs fan, so if this happens, it would be a dream come true," said Brent, who has undeniably had a better pre-season than several other players who were ahead of him on the depth chart when camp opened earlier this month.

Brent now appears entrenched as the club's third-line centre and it will take a huge effort from the likes of John Mitchell and Nazem Kadri over the final three games of the pre-season to uproot him.

Number of NHL games Tim Brent has played since being drafted by Anaheim in 2002. He has also played for Chicago and Pittsburgh.

In yesterday's practice, Kadri and Mitchell were handed burgundy jerseys — the colour belonging to five remaining fringe players who have either done little to impress management, or are fighting tough battles against players ahead of them on the depth chart.

Kadri and Mitchell have a last chance to impress tonight in Ottawa. Jay Rosehill, Luca Caputi, and Mike Zigomanis also wore burgundy yesterday, but they're more victims of the numbers game than drastically underperforming.

Caputi had been pencilled in on the third line, but the return of Fredrik Sjostrom from shoulder rehab yesterday bumped Caputi to the burgundy brigade. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Tiger gets feisty

Tiger Woods is starting to take this Ryder Cup personally. Woods fired back yesterday at a comment by Rory McIlroy last month that the 21-year-old would "love to face him" in the Ryder Cup if the game of the world's No. 1 player did not rapidly improve. Asked for a reaction, Woods leaned into the microphone and said only, "Me, too."

Lemon's status for next game unclear

Injured Argos quarterback didn't practise yesterday ◐ Still recovering from concussion suffered Sunday ◐ Bell may start in place of Lemon

Saved by the Bell?

More about Dalton Bell:

- Bell, 27, spent the two previous seasons with the Riders before being traded to Toronto in the off-season.
- Since 2007, he has spent time with Carolina, Green Bay and Seattle of the NFL before heading north to Saskatchewan in 2008.
- If Bell gets the start Saturday, it will be his first since 2006 when he was at West Texas A&M University.

Cleo Lemon was dressed for the weather yesterday.

The Toronto Argonauts quarterback wore sunglasses and had the hood of his sweatshirt pulled over his head, appropriate attire for a cool, fall day that included heavy rain and intermittent sunshine.

Trouble was, Lemon was indoors as the unpredictable conditions forced the Argos to practise at the Hershey Centre.

A seemingly subdued Lemon was relegated to spectator status as backup Dalton Bell took the first-team reps as Lemon recovers from the concussion he suffered in Sunday's 24-6 loss to Edmonton in Moncton.

Lemon didn't speak to reporters afterwards but Argos head coach Jim Barker said Lemon's status is day to day. However, Barker added if Lemon can't resume practising by tomorrow, Bell will get the start Saturday against the Saskatchewan Roughriders (TSN, 3 p.m. ET).

"I can't tell you what his situation is," Barker said. "It's a daily thing and until we're sure there are no issues he won't be participating.

"We'll find out as the week goes on."

But Barker made it crystal clear that if Lemon can play Saturday, he will.

"If Cleo is 100 per cent and can practise and go, Cleo is our starting quarterback," he said.

Tailback Cory Boyd wasn't at practice. He's returning from Georgia after attending the funeral of good friend Kenny McKinley. The Denver Broncos receiver committed suicide last week.

Boyd has missed Toronto's last two games with a concussion. Barker said he will know better once Boyd returns whether he will be able to play against Saskatchewan.

"It's hard to tell," Barker said. "He comes back (Monday) and we'll get him tested and they (team doctors) will tell me.

"I just don't know. I've stopped speculating. When a guy has a head injury I just move forward."

▶ The Si version of the 2010 Honda Civic Coupe looks fast even when it's standing still.

Who says you can't have fun for $26K?

- 2010 Honda Civic Si adds new meaning to the term 'bang for your buck'
- Performance coupe gets you on the fast lane without the gas pump shock

JIM ROBINSON
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

Having monster engines with 400 and 500 hp is all well and good, but when it takes the high side of $100 to fill the tank, well, there has to be an alternative.

Honda believes it has an answer to providing performance while staving off gas pump shock with the 2010 Civic Coupe Si.

The Coupe Si shares the same "one-motion" profile concept of the current Civic line with a steep windshield rake, negligible front and rear overhangs, and a reduced gap between the wheel wells and the tires for a sweeping, cohesive appearance.

While the standard Civic Sedan/Coupe has a 1.8-litre engine with 140 hp and 128 lb/ft of torque, the Coupe Si has a model-specific 2.0-litre, DOHC four-cylinder with 197 hp and 139 lb/ft of torque. Honda uses variable valve timing along with all the knowledge gained through motorcycle and Formula One racing to extract the kind of high-revving power that just sings out.

In fact, this car can hit the 7,800 rpm redline so fast, there is a red warning light set high on the dash that starts flashing at 7,400 rpm as you approach top end.

The interior treatment is unique to the Coupe Si with red stitching on the seats and front seat bolsters so big; you almost have to climb in over them.

The Si shows that motoring in a quick and tidy manner does not have to cost the better part of fifty grand.

What the Civic Si does is prove that you can have fun and be practical at the same time, which when you think about it, is what Civics have been all about since 1973.

▶ The 2011 Mercedes-Benz R-Class has a more macho look up front than previous models.

Shape of people movers to come

You can't do much better than 2011 M-B R-Class when it comes luxury SUVs

DREAM CAR

LORNE DRURY
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

If the 2011 Mercedes-Benz R-Class is the new shape of the modern minivan, then bring them on!

It has to be one of the classiest looking people movers on the planet, yet for some reason the R-Class really hasn't caught on with the public since its introduction in 2006.

Sure, the price tag north of $50K is a roadblock for many, but I really don't understand why anyone shopping the premium crossover market wouldn't take a look at the R-Class because it offers great versatility, solid performance and a handsome face.

Mercedes-Benz set out to redesign the vehicle for 2011. The new model has significant changes to the front end, but it basically stays true to its roots as one of the vehicles that invented the crossover craze.

The R-Class now has a more macho look up front and more of a road presence, something the previous generation may have lacked.

Mercedes-Benz has nine different variations of the R-Class worldwide, but in Canada only two models are available —the R350 4MATIC and R350 BlueTEC 4MATIC.

On the open road, the R-Class is a treat to drive. As Mercedes-Benz senior product manager for the R-Class Markus Rubenbauer puts it, "this car turns travel into a pleasant experience."

Up to seven passengers can enjoy that 'pleasant experience.' An attractive two-tone interior treatment is new for this year along with new gauges. Lots of aluminum, chrome and wood trim accents give it a rich, luxurious look and feel. So while the R-Class is a big and heavy vehicle, it has a great deal of versatility with the variety of seating configurations and cargo capacity.

To me, it is one of the best looking and luxurious SUVs (or crossovers) on the market and deserves a look for anyone shopping the premium luxury market.

▶ The upcoming Ford Focus has undergone rigorous climate testing to satisfy every driver's preference.

Focus tested to the extreme

The next generation Ford Focus has been tested in some of the most extreme locations on the planet, over frozen lakes, across the hottest deserts and up and down high Alpine passes to ensure impeccable reliability and dependability wherever it is sold.

While many of these tests focus on how such climate extremes affect the performance of the vehicle, the comfort of the driver and passengers in these tough conditions is equally important.

Ford's climate control test team travels the world to ensure that the car's EATC (Electronic Automatic Temperature Control) system can handle any conditions. The system needs to be able to cool the occupants down quickly and comfortably in scorching sun and warm them up just as rapidly when the temperature drops.

In the next generation Focus, the EATC system cools occupants more comfortably and efficiently than ever before. The fans are quieter and are capable of moving cool air through the cabin more quickly. The team's task is to fine-tune this system.

One of the team's regular testing locations is Antequera in Southern Spain.

In the height of summer this is one of the hottest places in continental Western Europe, with temperatures regularly rising above 40 deg C.

One of the main challenges for the team is that customers in North America have different preferences to their European counterparts, so the two test vehicles have different calibrations.

North American customers generally like to feel a strong cooling effect while the European customer preference is for the cabin to be cooled but not to feel chilled. This is where the team's experience in subjectively evaluating the system comes in. The sensors can monitor actual data, but the human experience is just as important.

More power to electric steering

Ford's system cuts down fuel usage ◆ Tech available in new Ford F-150

▶ The 2011 Ford F-150 uses the electric power-assist steering (EPAS) system.

DRIVING FORCE

JIL McINTOSH
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

Cars are easy to drive because of power steering, which reduces the effort needed for the driver to turn the front wheels. Traditionally this has been done with a fluid-filled hydraulic pump, but today, many automakers are turning to electric power-assisted steering (EPAS), which uses an electric motor instead.

Ford uses the system on its 2011 F-150 pickup truck. It's variable-assist, meaning that the steering feels lighter at low speeds so it's easy to steer when parking, and gets tighter at high speeds to give the driver confidence.

"It saves up to four per cent fuel economy, versus a hydraulic system where the pump runs all the time whether you're steering or not," says Garry Smith, EPAS supervisor for Ford.

The system combines information from a variety of sensors, including those that measure vehicle speed and steering wheel position, and determines how much assist to provide. More commonly found in cars, Smith says this is the first time EPAS has been used in a volume-production truck.

"The challenge was to steer a heavy vehicle with only 12 volts available," Smith says. "That was the key hurdle to putting it in a truck. There's only so much electrical power available with a typical 12-volt battery system in a truck, and this pulls a lot of current.

"We use an intelligent energy management system that always puts power to things like the steering or the headlights, and draws it from others to even out the energy load. If you're using the power steering a lot, when you're making several turns, it will turn things like the heated seats and rear defroster off and then back on."

Steering facts

- Hydraulic power steering pumps run all the time, powered by the engine, which uses more fuel because of it.
- Electric power steering works only when needed and is operated by an independent electric motor, and can improve fuel economy by about 4 per cent.

My Drive

SHOW HOST BISCH IN LOVE WITH JEEP

Do you do much off-road driving?
The funny thing about us Jeep drivers is we buy Jeeps because you have the capacity to go off-roading, but you never do. You usually do it once and then you go 'I'll never do that again' (laughs).

What do you love about the Wrangler?
I love that it's great in the winter because it's 4x4 and it's also a convertible. I have a freedom top, not a soft top. So I have you can pop out the two front panels, but you still have the security of having the hard top around the back. So you get a winter and a summer vehicle.

I hear you've somewhat customized it for the show ...
This transformed into my trailer when we were filming the show. I put a shower curtain rod across the back so the wardrobe people could come and hang up all my clothes. And I had a custom piece of foam put in the back because the seats turned down so the back turned into a bed and I'd get in there with my laptop and rest while waiting for my scenes. It was totally customized without spending very much money (laughs).

What would we find in your glove compartment?
Basically, it's like my filing cabinet and a business card graveyard. I basically use it as a storage compartment and I can no longer jam anything else in there.

Meet the driver

- WHO HE IS Chad Bisch is the energetic co-host of the new W Network TV show Burn My Mortgage (premiering Oct. 5) in which he helps homeowners shave years off their mortgages.
- WHAT HE DRIVES A black 2007 Jeep Wrangler. It's my third Jeep. I'm so passionate about Jeeps. I was always driving the two-door Jeeps because that's all they had. Then in 2007, they came out with the four-door. With my lifestyle, I can now put four guys in here and four sets of golf clubs.

BAD DRIVING WRITTEN IN THE STARS?

People will be predisposed to be good or less good at pretty much every endeavour under the sun.

But it always surprises me how clean is the cleave between those who have some grace or intuition behind the wheel, and those whose every drive is fraught with in-trepidation and confusion and anger — like instead of driving they were actually engaged in trying to assemble Ikea furniture.

I remember a performance driving instructor once remarking to me that it was difficult to teach "smoothness" to prospective racing car drivers — they sometimes got quicker, but never smoother than the drivers that started out smooth.

In addition to innate physical or neurological differences, you know that personality type also has to figure into the driving equation. For example, overly aggressive types can be awful drivers, as can be overly timid drivers.

My observation is that people are generally decent drivers, regardless of personality or attributes (physical or otherwise), when they bring "anticipation" and "mechanical sympathy" to the task at hand. Thinking a couple of steps ahead keeps you from having sphincter moments, and understanding a bit about the "horse" underneath you will surely help you from getting thrown off.

Trying to accelerate out of a snow bank by immediately nailing the accelerator is always a telltale sign of someone who has absolutely no bond with his horse.

Of course there is, and always has been, some stereotyping about driving capabilities along gender and age lines — something that's reflected in insurance premiums. For example, teenage boys, who are perceived to be risk takers, pay a lot more than teenage girls.

Watch the signs

Insurance Hotline's Lee Romanov runs a website called carcarma.com that lists driver types according to zodiac signs (tongue firmly in cheek, of course). Here's the rundown from worst to best:

- LIBRA not good at snap decisions
- AQUARIUS inflexible and rebellious
- ARIES impatient and warrior-like
- PISCES sign of directionally-challenged fish, enjoy daydreaming
- SCORPIO dominating and vengeful
- TAURUS sign of the obstinate Bull, charges red lights
- SAGITTARIUS experienced risk takers
- CAPRICORN goal oriented
- VIRGO attention to detail
- CANCER homebodies, view other motorists as family
- GEMINI original multi-taskers
- LEO Generous, comfortable sharing

"I hate that," says Lee Romanov, of InsuranceHotline.com. "This industry (vehicle insurance) is the only one that still allows for ratings based on stereotyping. No one else does that. You have responsible girls and you have responsible boys — that's the bottom line. You shouldn't be quoted based on what they think you might do in the future."

With tongue in cheek (I think), Romanov notes that the biggest influence over how good a driver you are is actually your Zodiac sign. She examined the driving record of over 100,000 people with varying Zodiac signs, and said the results were "overwhelmingly" clear: drivers with certain Zodiac signs seemed destined to have more accidents, while other signs were destined to have more tickets. (See accompanying chart for rankings, and her website, carcarma.com, for your own personal Zodiac driving profile).

Libras are the worst. They're not good at making snap decisions, and their propensity for creating balance and harmony, makes them politely flag drivers through, which often causes others to rear-end them.

What do you think Mr. or Ms. Libra? Were you born bad, or made bad? Or a victim of a conspiracy theory? Either way, food for thought.

Impreza's got loyal fans

Subaru model may not be very popular but enthusiasts share a special bond with sporty car

▶ If you enjoy performance driving, then a pre-owned Subaru Impreza may be the car for you.

SECOND GEAR

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

The Subaru Impreza has always been an enthusiast's car that packed quirky styling, unique powertrains and earned a loyal following of fans after year-round sporty performance.

All models, including the last-generation (2002 to 2007 model years inclusive), got a decision-free All Wheel Drive (AWD) system and horizontally-opposed four-cylinder boxer engine. The boxer engine sets the pistons against one another in a flat, wide configuration which lowers the car's centre of gravity for more nimble handling. It sits closer to the road than a traditional in-line engine, and is easily dislodged in the case of an accident- making it a safety feature as well.

2006 saw the engine updated, upping power output slightly to 173 ponies. Automatic or manual transmissions are both available.

Models from 2004 and onwards were fitted with upgraded suspension components for a better ride, as well as added convenience features. Depending on the model and year, look for features like power windows, mirrors, locks, air conditioning, cruise control and tilt steering.

The specs

- MODEL 2002 to 2007 Subaru Impreza
- VEHICLE TYPE Sedan or five-door
- APPROXIMATE USED PRICE RANGE $6,000 to $25,000

What Owners Like

Not surprisingly, last-generation Impreza owners mostly enjoy the vehicle's driving experience, winter-time traction, performance and the added utility of the five-door model.

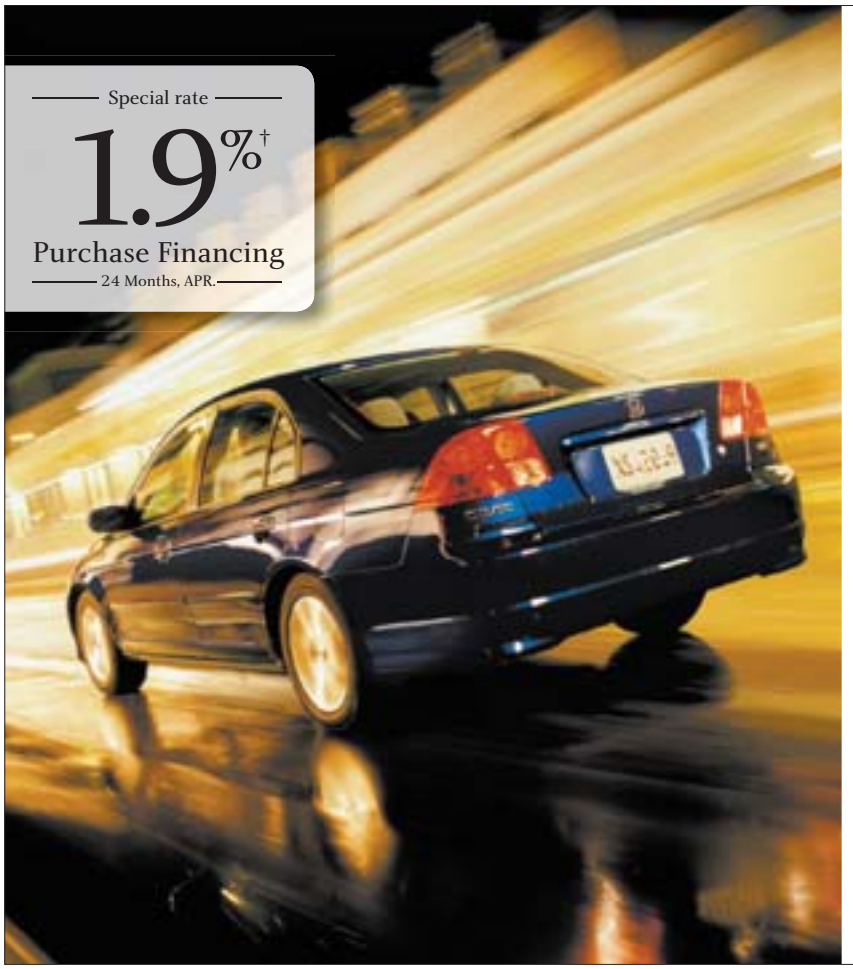
What Owners Hate

Common complaints include a rough ride on some models, as well as limited rear-seat space, controversial styling on certain models, and a plain, low-key appearance.

Common issues

On earlier models, a possibly faulty clutch line and slave cylinder may result in a limp clutch pedal. Squeaks and rattles are the next most commonly reported problems.

Though largely proven and known to be 'bulletproof', the Impreza did suffer from what appears to be a fairly common head-gasket related problem.



It's a used Honda, not a used car.

Honda reliability. Certified. When Honda certifies a used vehicle, you know it can be depended on. Every Certified Used Honda undergoes a series of thorough dealer inspections to ensure it upholds the reliability of the Honda name. You get the performance, safety and efficiency of a Honda, with the added assurance that comes with a factory warranty.

†Limited time financing offer on all Honda Certifed Used Civics available through Honda Financial Services, on approved credit. Offer only available up to 24 months on Honda Certified Used Honda Civic, Accord and CR-V (2005–2009 model years). Finance example based on 2005 Honda Civic model: $10,000 at 1.9% per annum equals $424.96 per month for 24 months. Cost of borrowing is $199.04 for a total obligation of $10,199.04. Taxes, license, insurance, registration and fees are not included. See your Honda dealer for full details. Dealer may sell for less. Offer expires September 30, 2010.

Tech that helps you stay safe

Automakers offering plenty of choices Some safety features that are now standard in most cars

▶ Staying safe on the road becomes easier as more and more technologies become standard in cars.

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

Canadian shoppers are demanding more from their vehicles than ever, and carmakers are working overtime to deliver.

In addition to increased fuel efficiency, dependability and feature content, today's driver wants a vehicle that offers exceptional safety, too. Here's a look at some of the most common and important safety features you'll likely find standard or available on your next new ride.

Electronic Stability Control (ESC)

Marketed under various trade names like 'VSC' or 'StabiliTrak', Electronic Stability Control helps keep drivers out of dangerous skids by monitoring vehicle behaviour, cutting engine power and even self-applying individual brakes as needed to compensate for a loss of traction.

Since the computer-controlled system reacts more quickly, consistently and precisely than a human driver, it can often neutralize a potential skid condition before the driver has time to react to it.

Many ESC systems in larger crossover and SUV models even feature pre-emptive rollover mitigation programming for additional security against rollover accidents.

Advanced Antilock Braking (ABS):

Braking technology has been evolving steadily, and today's braking systems now offer more functionality and safety than ever before. In addition to standard antilock, many carmakers also offer both Electronic Brake Distribution (EBD) and Brake Assist (BA).

Electronic Brake Distribution (EBD) works to meter out stopping power on a wheel-by-wheel basis based on the available traction at each corner of the vehicle. By applying a 'just-right' amount of stopping power to each wheel, EBD can compensate for varying surface traction or an unevenly-loaded vehicle — ensuring all stops occur with stability and predictability.

Brake Assist (BA) automatically boosts stopping power if a 'panic' stop situation is detected, compensating for a natural tendency of drivers not to apply enough stopping power in an emergency situation.

Bluetooth

Talking on the phone while driving is a good way to get into an accident — but Bluetooth makes it safe and easy. By connecting wirelessly to your cellular handset, a Bluetooth phone system allows calls to be handled by steering-wheel mounted buttons, with audio played through the vehicle's stereo system and picked up by a built-in microphone.

Active Head Restraints

Whiplash can be a serious and debilitating injury — so many carmakers are offering Active Head Restraints to combat it. In the event your vehicle is rear-ended, specially-designed headrests offer additional support when and where it's needed to prevent heads from "snapping" back, helping to reduce potential injuries.

▶ The 2011 Lexus CT 200h.

Lexus adds to hybrid lineup

The all-new 2011 CT 200h premium compact hybrid brings a contemporary, stylish flare to Lexus' hybrid lineup.

As the fifth Lexus hybrid, the CT 200h benefits from a new platform incorporating numerous, exclusively developed body, chassis and Lexus Hybrid Drive engineering applications designed to offer customers a choice of distinct driving modes: Sport, when the driver wants a more dynamic experience, or Normal, Eco, or EV to satisfy more typical day-to-day driving needs.

Supplementing the Normal drive mode of the new Lexus full hybrid compact's seamless, Electronically-Controlled Continuously Variable Transmission (E-CVT), three drive modes may be selected to fit the driver's needs or mood, while further improving either performance and dynamic ability, or driving efficiency, fuel economy and emissions.

EV, ECO and Normal drive modes place the emphasis on more relaxed driving, with particular attention paid to ride comfort, smooth acceleration and the minimization of NVH within the body, chassis and powertrain.

From start-up and at speeds of less than 40 kilometres per hour, the CT 200h can operate in EV mode for just under two kilometres driving under electric motor power alone.

PROBLEM WITH CONVENTIONAL TANK-TYPE WATER HEATER

Thermal Heat Loss
20-40% of energy consumed by a traditional tank heater is wasted as heat is slowly lost due to radiant heat loss from the storage tank

Limited Supply
Conventional water heaters frequently run out of hot water after several back-to-back demands and often after only one shower or demand. The user must then wait for a long period of time for the heater to "refresh"

Overheating
To ensure a traditional heater refreshes at a reasonable rate, most heaters are set at very high temperatures (130F+). This wastes energy and increases risk of scalding, especially for children and the elderly.

Hard Water Minerals
Hard water scale forms most readily when water is heated for extended periods. Hard water scale quickly coats the internal components causing a loss of efficiency and shorter life, and often leaks.

Short Life / Disposal
Conventional water heaters typically last from 6 to 12 years in most residential applications. They are bulky and take up a huge amount of landfill space and are costly to recycle.

Bulky Size
Due to their large storage tanks, conventional water heaters are bulky and take up lots of space.

THE TANKLESS WATER HEATER SOLUTION

Reduce water heating costs as much as 50%! - Tankless water heaters heat entirely on demand only when hot water is needed. Since there is no hot water storage, thermal heat loss is almost completely eliminated.
Tankless heaters never run out of hot water - they can literally run all day long if necessary and they will never stop producing hot water since they heat water instantly on demand.
Sophisticated tankless heaters allow you to set the ongoing water temperature to a much more reasonable and safer temperature, closer to the actual temperature you will use the water at, thereby reducing risk of scalding. According to the US. Department of Energy, for each 10F reduction in water temperature, you can save between 3%-5% in energy costs.
Since hot water is not stored, tankless water heaters generally handle hard water minerals and sediments much better than conventional tanks. This makes them far less likely to leak or rupture, and able to maintain efficiency throughout their whole lifecycle. Accordingly, many have much longer warranties.
Tankless water heaters can last more than 20 years.
Tankless water heaters are about the size of a briefcase (electric units) - they save valuable floor space that can be used for storage etc. especially in condos and apartments.
